

Dear Mr. Herrell,

I've just received your attack mailer on Mike Karickhoff.

I've heard you are a Christian man; that's something I look for in a politician. In today's big government, it's very important that our candidates and representatives have faith and live those values. Today, I have good reason to believe you aren't quite living up to those values.

You know Mike Karickhoff, you've worked with him, and have probably had plenty of opportunity to spend time at public functions where he and his family have been in attendance. I know Mike Karickhoff, and I know you are spreading untrue statements. In your soul, you know the accusations you are throwing at Mike are incorrect.

How does that make you feel to publish lies about Mike while professing to be a Christian? Or, is it alright to publish those lies in the hopes that those statements will stick in the minds of voters instead of the truth? And Mike, as a Christian and a fair man, is trying to run a clean campaign.

If you are what you say you are, Mr. Herrell, and you've voted for your constituents in the past (instead of along strict party lines), you have NO NEED to lower yourself into the mud in order to better your opponent. You should have plenty to say about all the good things you brought to your district. When you lower yourself to the level that was displayed today, you become someone who has no business making decisions for my family and the rest of Indiana families. Haven't you been listening? This is exactly what we're trying to get rid of in our government.

Shame on you, Ron Herrell. I'll assume you are not sleeping well at night after sinking to this level. You can be assured I will do everything I can to see that Mr. Karickhoff is elected.
